1. Q: We notice that some email addresses and filenames are written in Spanish. Our company's first language is Spanish, even though we perform well in English and use it continuously on technical settings. Our question is, is there a preferred language for the proposal and documentation?

A: We are fluent in both Spanish and English; the proposals can be presented in either of these languages.

2. Q: Is there internet access for the computers in the server room, such that we could use it to perform remote support in case of need?

A: Yes, the server will be fully internet covered. For security reasons, we would prefer the system to be operated without this connection, but we could enable it for remote support if needed.

3. Q: In order to best cover the requirements of the project and present a stronger proposal, we wish to participate with the backup of a bigger company that would be supporting us. Is such a scheme possible?

A: Yes, this is an open RFP process, so we have no objection if your company associates with other companies in order to produce the proposal. If the proposal is presented as a consortium, please make sure to include all the relevant information of the companies involved.
